"Perceive that which cannot be seen with the eye." In 1643, after over 100 duels, Japan's most famous swordsman Miyamoto Musashi retired to a cave named Reigando. While meditating on his life and impermanence, Musashi spent his last years drinking tea, and writing the seminal classic on strategy The Book of Five Rings. We like his philosophy: open yourself to the everyday beauty of life. Make life your art and pursue it with untethered passion.

About Samovar Tea Lounge

We are a small local San Francisco company wildly passionate about doing just one thing: creating positive human connection through tea. That's it.

Life today has gotten totally out of control. Sure, information is power but too much of anything is no good and we're getting short-circuited here. Fried actually. There's a time for everything, and at Samovar we embrace, no relish, the time it takes to make and then sip tea. To connect with another real human being, in person. So you can see eyes sparkle. Touch the warm flesh of another's cheek. Inhale the buttery aromas of the scones and the cardamom and pepper of the chai. To really see that other person across the table from you. Let our tea connect you to this moment, to your life. It is a big deal.

Try this: turn off your cell phone and close your computer and look around. Let your mind wander. Let us serve you. We love tea and we love to serve. We are here to do just one thing, so thank you for supporting us and joining us in our mission. Creating positive human connection.
